Riley's Rebuilds

Riley Schlick-Trask is the founder and driving force behind Riley's Rebuilds, a dynamic business dedicated to restoring and revitalizing classic cars and parts. With a deep passion for both engineering and classic mechanics, Riley has spent years perfecting her skills and knowledge in the art of restoring vintage vehicles. As a third-year student at Connecticut College, Riley is a double major in Math and Physics. She will be continuing her Mechanical Engineering studies through the prestigious Washington University in St. Louis engineering school program. Balancing her college education with running a successful business that supports six high school students is a testament to her time management skills.

Her athletic background also plays a key role in her success. Riley is a standout athlete at Connecticut College, playing goalkeeper for the Division 3 Connecticut Camels. Playing collegiate-level sports adds the values of teamwork, discipline, and perseverance to anyone's growth. These traits, combined with her relentless dedication to quality, have shaped Riley into a respected name in the world of automotive restoration.

Riley is regularly asked to present and share her story with young aspiring students who enjoy the world of cars, trucks, and all things mobility. The automotive industry has been an endless well of opportunities, and Riley is passionate about sharing that knowledge.
